Wilfred Owen

Wilfred Owen - Wikipedia

Wilfred Edward Salter Owen, MC (18 March 1893 – 4 November 1918) was an English poet and soldier. He was one of the leading poets of the First World War. His war poetry on the horrors of trenches and gas warfare was heavily influenced by his mentor Siegfried Sassoon, and stood in stark contrast both to the public perception of war at the time and to the confidently patriotic verse written by earlier war poets such as Rupert Brooke.

ONOMATOPOEIA: Owen describes the effort of the men returning from the line. They do not march proudly but “trudge” through the mud with exhaustion and effort. The word choice conveys the noise and difficulty of plodding through the wet mud when being totally worn out. The hyperbole or exaggeration of “All lame...all blind” indicates

Dulce et Decorum Est - Notes

Wilfred Owen wrote this poem as a response to the pro-war poetry that was popular before and during the First World War. He wanted people to read about the realities of war and to realise that it was not a noble and exciting game full of opportunities for honour and glory. Wilfred Owen was killed in action just one week before WWI ended.
