"My master plan is happiness," writes Michael Dickman in his wonderfully strange third book, Green Migraine. Here, imagination and reality swirl in the juxtaposition between beauty and violence in the natural world. Drawing inspiration from the verdant poetry of John Clare, Dickman uses hyper-real, dreamlike images to encapsulate, illustrate, and illuminate how we access internal and external landscapes. The result is nothing short of a fantastic, modern-day fairy tale.

Michael Dickman's new collection, Green Migraine, explores chronic pain, fatherhood, and the poet John Clare through intense, fleeting images that evoke a sublime and subliminary landscape. The book is formed around five different migraines, represented by colors—white, red, yellow, green, and black. Dickman's first two collections—The End of the West...

Paula K. Dumas: Regarded as a young poetic genius with a style like no one else, Michael Dickman's poems give a voice to the real-life sorrows, horrors, and joys of the human condition. He's the award-winning author of five books of poetry, including Green Migraine. His poems have appeared in the New Yorker and the American Poetry Review. He teaches creative writing at Princeton University. He's giving a colorful, authentic voice, to all people with migraine.

Michael Dickman, Green Migraine Publisher: Copper Canyon Press 2016, 75 pages, paperback, $16. MICHAEL DICKMAN'S WORK doesn't follow the conventions proliferated amongst modern poetry. While much of contemporary poetry is written in stichs—poems of symmetrical lineation and meter, not broken into stanzas—Dickman's poems are vast and austere, somewhat sparse, but somehow expansive.
