Natural capital is the world's stock of natural resources, which includes geology, soils, air, water and all living organisms. Some natural capital assets provide people with free goods and services, often called ecosystem services. Two of these (clean water and fertile soil) underpin our economy and society, and thus make human life possible.

The assumptions of human capital theory revolve around the immeasurable nature of its many forms. Economic capital can be measured by its ability to produce wages, however, an intrinsic value of human capital exists although it is not always measurable. Secondly, human capital may be stored but not fully utilized at all times therefore making it difficult to observe and study consistently ...

Human activity has eroded natural capital, especially in the past 50 years. These long-standing patterns of overuse, overexploitation and degradation have undermined much of our natural capital stock on a global scale and to an alarming extent. In response to rapidly dwindling natural capital, there is urgent need for us to take action to conserve and enhance our natural endowments on the ...
